In that time we have seen a few instances of the RBA appear on the market (GPS). One of which is the only legitimate and retail version available. Another is completely free and has been in the wild for a few months now. Radio Lab Tool 2.13.222.0 What is the RBA? The RBA, which stands for Radio Lab Builder is nothing more than a demonstration of the RTAS architecture, RTAS API, and a few dozen drivers for commercial and non-commercial DSP based radio application devices. Many of these drivers were extracted by an 'evolved' hacker A few months ago a new version of the radio lab tool appeared on the market. At the time I was asked by a friend about it. At first I thought that this was a new version of the radio lab tool, but the software downloaded was actually a cracked version of the first retail version of the radio lab tool. That version was RBA 2.13.222.0. I use the radio lab tool, and it works perfectly on my Windows 10 PC. However my devices range from my TI based devices to the Asus ZenFone 3. I have successfully tested it with RTK, ICOM, and PAF. Some of my other devices work, such as the iPhone 7 and several MSP430 based devices. I can get the radio lab tool to debug them. RBA 2.13.222.0 The radio lab tool is a cross compiler. It works for devices based on the Texas Instruments (TI) OMAP 4430 (EVK) TI platform. The radio lab tool will not work on any device with the STMicroelectronics STM32F2. A list of compatible devices can be found here: RBA 2.13.222.0 I tried a radio lab tool version for Android. However it did not work on any device I had tested. For the record I have tested the newer version of the radio lab tool using a P
